The IUEM has offered the Postgraduate Program in International Migration since 1999, the Postgraduate Program in International Development Cooperation since 1997 and the Official Doctorate Program in International Migration and International Development Cooperation since 2002. The IUEM diffuse and shares knowledge through two key platforms: the scientific Migration Journal (1996) and the Ibero-American Observatory of Human Mobility, Migration and Development, OBIMID (2014).
Master’s Degree in International Migration

European Credit Transfer System (ECTS) is a system used to track academic credits. It allows for easy comparison of the academic load of courses and programs across borders. The program is delivered in English.

OBJECTIVES: The program is designed to equip students with a comprehensive understanding of the factors, processes, and policies that shape and sustain international migration.

CURRICULUM: The program offers advanced training in the following areas:

- Human Mobility and Migration: Focuses on the human aspects of migration and how it impacts individuals and societies.
- Integration and Social Transformation: Examines the processes of integration and social change in societies receiving migrants.
- Research and Professional Intervention: Prepares students for research careers in the field of international migration.
- Internships: Offers hands-on experience in the field.

DURATION: The program can be completed in one or two years (1st year, minimum 30 ECTS).

FINANCIAL SUPPORT: Scholarships and loans are available to eligible students.

SUBMISSION OF APPLICATIONS: Applications are accepted until the deadline indicated on the program’s webpage.

---

Master’s Degree in International Development Cooperation

European Credit Transfer System (ECTS) is a system used to track academic credits. It allows for easy comparison of the academic load of courses and programs across borders. The program is delivered in English.

OBJECTIVES: The program is designed to equip students with a comprehensive understanding of the factors, processes, and policies that shape and sustain international migration.

CURRICULUM: The program offers advanced training in the following areas:

- Human Mobility and Migration: Focuses on the human aspects of migration and how it impacts individuals and societies.
- Integration and Social Transformation: Examines the processes of integration and social change in societies receiving migrants.
- Research and Professional Intervention: Prepares students for research careers in the field of international migration.
- Internships: Offers hands-on experience in the field.

DURATION: The program can be completed in one or two years (1st year, minimum 30 ECTS).

FINANCIAL SUPPORT: Scholarships and loans are available to eligible students.

SUBMISSION OF APPLICATIONS: Applications are accepted until the deadline indicated on the program’s webpage.

---

Research Areas

The Institute of Studies on Migration - ISM was established in 1996. It is a research center that brings together academic, intellectual, and policy-making bodies to analyze and promote the analysis and debate about issues related to migration. It is dedicated to analyzing the political and social changes brought about by migration. Its main lines of research are the processes and policies of integration and social cohesion, second generation, migration and development, and the human rights of migrants.

Migration Journal

MIGRATION is a nongovernmental scientific journal that focuses on current issues related to international migration. It was launched in 1996 with the aim of offering migration scholars a platform on which to publish their work. It holds the seal of excellence of Spanish scientific journals and is indexed in SJR-SCOPUS.

Migration and Development

The Ibero-American Observatory on Human Mobility, Migration and Development (OBIMID), led by the University of Comillas, is a reference center in the Ibero-American region for analyzing the political, economic, and social impact of migration. Its main areas of research are the processes and policies of integration and social cohesion, second generation, migration and development, and the human rights of migrants. The Observatory has been awarded the Baudouin Chair by the University of Ghent and the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, which highlights its high standards of excellence.